Spring 2008

Dear rock gardeners

It's still too early to mention now all the new species which will be available in course of the year 2008. These new plants will be ready for sale during next summer and autumn and are still too small now. Also this year I will be focused more on the genus Dionysia.

Nevertheless there are still many 2007 plants included in this list like Androsace tangulashanensis and Gentiana szechenyi, the yellow flowering Androsace bisulca var aurata and Benthamiella patagonica, Daphne calcicola, just to mention a few.

The crême de la crême of this list however is definitely my personal favorite, Nototriche mackleanii, an endemic treasure of the high Andes in Peru. It's a gorgeous alpine making tight silvery hairy cushions with huge purple stem less Crocus like flowers.

Anyway, take your time and choose your own favorite.

In April I will be on tour for lecturing in Scotland, Ireland an England. If attendants like to order plants of this list and want to bring these plants to the meeting, then they are kindly invited to send me their orders before the end of March.

Wishing you good gardening!!!

Ger and Mariet

Visits

Visits to my nursery and garden are welcomed, even on Sundays; I shall be pleased to make an appointment.

Horst is situated in the southeast of the Netherlands and can easily be reached via motorway A 73.

Growing conditions

In my lists I usually indicate my views as to the most general desired conditions (which will be in conformity with many other experts views) but :
hardiness and successful growing is certainly not only dependent on temperature/climatic conditions or even the plant's own physical properties, but also [and often] mainly on the combination with other factors. In practice quite a few plants, theoretically condemned to an alpine house, do very well outside, be it just with winter protection. Only by experience can be ascertained what they can endure, what they could endure.

Try a few plants in different conditions / places, dividing the risks, gather experience with a quite interesting match. There will be no harm of course to apply a bit of common sense.
